bev saunders
OKLAHOMA FARMER

Farmers learn a lot from their dads. Most importantly, they learn integrity. That's why it's so surprising to hear the Attorney General accuse poultry farmers of breaking the law when it comes to applying poultry litter as fertilizer to their land. Truth is, they're only applying what the law allows. If there's any left, they sell to others, like cattlemen, who use it to help grow hay for their cattle. It's just one of many things the industry is doing to help our environment. The farmers. The companies. Working together.
OklahomaPoultry.org

Poultry Community COUNCIL

©2006 Poultry Community Council

Sun 9-17-06 / Tulsa World

EXHIBIT 2

bev saunders

OKLAHOMA FARMER

Farmers learn a lot from their dads. Most importantly, they learn integrity. That's why it's so surprising to hear the Attorney General accuse poultry farmers of breaking the law when it comes to applying poultry litter as fertilizer to their land. Truth is, they're only applying what the law allows. If there's any left, they sell to others, like cattlemen, who use it to help grow hay for their cattle. It's just one of many things the industry is doing to help our environment. The farmers. The companies. Working together.
OklahomaPoultry.org

Poultry Community COUNCIL